'Codal limitations' stopping Gen Bajwa to respond to allegations

General (ret'd) Bajwa is mostly blamed for keenly pursuing what is generally referred to as "Imran Khan project"

MONITORING DESK

ISLAMABAD: Former army chief Gen (ret'd) QamarJavedBajwa has a lot to tell about Imran Khan, his rise and rise in politics and how he ran his government. Sources close to General (ret'd) Bajwa said that the recently retired former Army Chief could not respond in public to what PTI chairman alleges against him because of some codal limitations but it is insisted what Khan mostly says about Bajwa is untrue. Gen (ret'd) Bajwa is now the focused target of Imran Khan who not only sees the former army chief as the sole reason for all his failures in the government but also alleges that the general had removed his government as part of a US conspiracy. While Imran Khan says it was General (ret'd) Bajwa who was controlling NAB and deciding the arrest and release of politicians, the other side insists that Khan during his premiership was paranoid towards his opposition and wanted to see all his key opponents behind the bars. These sources said when General (ret'd) Bajwa will speak, he would have no different tale to tell than what the former DG FIA Bashir Memon had alleged about the then prime minister Imran Khan. Like Bashir Memon, who had alleged to have been pressurised by the then prime minister to arrest his opponents, according to the sources the former premier had also been asking

President Alvi for further cementing Pak-Italy ties

The president said that a fairly large number of Pakistanis (approximately 200,000) were living in Italy and contributing towards the socio-economic development of the country and urged that the welfare of these Pakistanis should be the most priority

ISLAMABAD: President Dr Arif Alvi on Monday stressed bilateral relationship with Italy in the fields of defence, agriculture, animal husbandry and information technology. He made these remarks while talking to Pakistan's Ambassador-designate to Italy, Ali Javed, here at the Aiwan-e-Sadr. During the meeting, the president appreciated the idea of establishing manufacturing units by Pakistani diasporas in the industrial-free zone of Italy for manufacturing and exporting Pakistani goods and products in Italy and rest of the Europe. He said the avenues for exports of human intellect, knowledge and skills online to Italy by our IT professionals and related fields needed to be explored. This way, he said, the human resource would be retained in Pakistan whereas their skills and knowledge could be shared. He said the country needed a skilled workforce for industrial, agricultural and manufacturing development. The president said that the Ambassador and the entire ancillary staff in Italy should focus their energy on resolving the issues and problems faced by the Pakistani diasporas in Italy and provide them with the necessary support, and counselling services online and at their doorsteps. The president advised the ambassador-designate to keep close linkages with the Chambers of Commerce in Pakistan and major industrial and manufacturing entities of Pakistan and explore the possibility of joint ventures with the Italian counterparts. He said that Italian investors must be encouraged to shift their industrial units to Pakistan and benefit from the cost-effective labour, availability of raw materials, and investment-friendly policies in our country.

The president said that there was a need to highlight the atrocities being committed perpetually by India in the Indian Illegally Occupied Jammu & Kashmir (IIOJK), and the increasing incidences of intimidation, harassment, and marginalization of minorities, especially Muslims, and the increasing trend of Islamophobia in India, which was putting the life and property of the Muslims of India in great danger.

The president said that Pakistan and Italy had a commonality of views on a number of regional and global issues, particularly reforming the UN Security Council and both countries should work closely on all issues of common interest. He said that the Strategic Engagement Plan signed between the two countries in 2013 provided an excellent framework to steer bilateral and multilateral cooperation forward in a holistic and sustained manner and expressed hope that the Ambassador-designate would work towards enhancing these engagements.

The president said that Italy was one of the largest trading partners of Pakistan in the EU and among the top ten globally.

There was great potential for expanding bilateral trade and investment due to the complementarities between the two countries' economies, he added. He further said that the existing trade of around US$ 1.3 billion did not represent the true potential on both sides and there was a need to make concerted efforts to increase the volume.

SNGPL disconnects over 15 gas connections

ISLAMABAD: Special Task Force of Sui Northern Gas Pipelines Limited (SNGPL) on Monday launched a crackdown against users of illegal compressors in the Islamabad Region, who were involved in depriving other consumers of gas in the peak winter season and putting people's lives at risk.

During the operation, SNGPL inspection teams visited different localities including Bhara Kahu, Taxila, Margalla Valley and Koth Hathia and disconnected more than 15 connections after they found the users involved in illegal activity of compressor installation.

"The operation will continue unabated till bringing the illegal activity to a complete end," spokesman for the SNGPL Islamabad Region Shahid Akram told APP.

He said it was unfair that some elements deprived other consumers of smooth supply of gas by installing electronic/sucking devices to manage better pressure for themselves.

He said the SNGPL vigilance teams and special task force were busy in conducting a detailed survey of all sectors, societies and other localities, within the Islamabad region including capital territory, Murree, Kahuta, Attock, Fateh Jang and Taxilla to take legal action against compressor users. The SNGPL spokesman said domestic consumers had appreciated the operation against this illegal activity and urged the local administration to take appropriate measures for preventing the sale of illegal compressors and other devices used to increase the gas pressure. - APP

PBM to launch nationwide Thalassemia awareness drive

ISLAMABAD :Managing Director, Pakistan Bait-ul-Mal (PBM), Amir Fida Paracha on Monday said that PBM has planned to launch a nationwide awareness campaign on prevention of Thalassemia among the children soon. According to a report, approximately 100,000 patients are suffering from Thalassemia in Pakistan and every year 5,000 babies are born with this deadly disease. These patients need regular blood transfusion and iron chelating agent after consultation with a qualified Hematologist along with regular diagnostic investigations on monthly basis which is unaffordable by the poor families in Pakistan. Talking to APP, Amir Fida Paracha said, "Thalassemia is a disease which can be controlled through educating people about its prevention." He mentioned, "The reason of transmission of this disease to the next generation is basically the marriage of two Thalassemic patients which can be avoided through spreading awareness." "Both the parents, if are Thalassemic patients, may not face the severe consequence of this disease but their child has to suffer for the rest of his life and depend on blood transfusion," he observed. The MD PBM said, "Thalassemia awareness campaign will be run with the help of the universities." "Higher education institutions are the best platforms from where we can initiate our campaign by educating the young minds and engage them to further spread information about the causes and prevention measures of this disease," he said. Referring to the example of Turkey, the MD PBM said that Turkey has controlled over this disease through making a separate section in marriage certificate for the verification of the marrying couple if any of them are Thalassemic patient. During last three years, Amir Fida Paracha conveyed that the PBM has provided financial assistance to more than 3000 Thalassemic patients. Keeping in view the importance such centers and to cater the patients in Pakistan, PBM in financial collaboration with a private company had established a state of the art Thalassemia Center in F-9 Park to provide free of cost medical treatment facilities to the patients. "The main objectives behind creating this facility are to extend quality medical care free of cost, increase life expectancy and improvement in the quality of life for those inflicted by this daunting disease and provide a ray of hope amidst miseries of the children with neglected backgrounds and orphans and less privileged who cannot afford the cost for the treatment of this serious disease," he informed. Thalassaemia is a blood disorder passed down through families (inherited) in which the body makes an abnormal form of hemoglobin, the protein in red blood cells that carries oxygen. The disorder results in excessive destruction of red blood cells, which leads to anemia. Anemia is a disorder in which your body doesn't have enough normal, healthy Red Blood Cells (RBC). This disease is inherited, meaning that at least one of the parents is a carrier of the disease. It is caused by either a genetic mutation, or a deletion of certain key genes.

China-Pak-Belt LUSAIL stadium hosts final

DNA

ISLAMABAD: LUSAIL stadium on Sunday 18th December successfully hosted the FIFA World Cup Qatar 2022 Final. An event that secured its place in football and architectural history. China Railway Construction Corporation Ltd (CRCC), the main contractor, with the collaboration of more than 3000 Pakistani Engineers and Workers, spent 4 years constructing this "Shiny Golden Bowl", said the Chinese Embassy Islamabad in a tweet, according to Gwadar Pro on Monday. Lusail Stadium received a five-star rating on 16 August 2022 for its design and construction from the Global Sustainability Assessment System GSAS. The iconic stadium entertained 80,000 fans who came together for the World Cup Final played between Argentina and France. According to the Qatar football Association, the stadium is expected to be reconfigured into a 40,000-seat stadium. Excess seating will be removed, and other parts of the building will be repurposed as a community space with shops, cafés, athletic and education facilities, and a health clinic. The design is inspired by the handcrafted bowls found throughout the Arab and Islamic worlds during the rise of civilization, while light interplays are reminiscent of the region's fan lanterns. The golden exterior will fade over time, replicating aged metal handicrafts to create a venue alive with cultural character. The procurement process for the stadium conversion began in 2014. The stadium was built as a joint venture by HBK Contracting and the China Railway Construction Corporation. Like the other stadiums planned for the 2022 World Cup, the Lusail Stadium is cooled using solar power and is claimed to have zero carbon footprint. Construction began on 11th April 2017. Completion of the stadium was originally scheduled for 2020. It was then to host three friendly matches until the 2022 World Cup, but as the completion of the stadium was postponed, it subsequently hosted 10 games including the final.

Solo show on contemporary art concludes at PNCA

ISLAMABAD :A solo show of contemporary art paintings by Natasha Malik concluded here Monday at Khas Art Gallery featuring "The Life of an Image" - a multimedia series through which Malik explored the introspective artistic process, its challenges, complexities and outcomes. The body of work examined the creative process of art-making and interprets the life of the work once it leaves the artist's studio. The artwork exists and interacts within a multitude of systems, which often operate entirely independent of the artist, each with its own vision and purpose. Ultimately, these systems determine the life of the work in terms of how it is perceived, where it will be viewed and by whom, and how it is contextualized. These thematic concerns culminate in Artscape, a four-player board game the artist has created which enables its players to experience the art world. The four players are The Artist, The Gallerist, The Critic, and The Collector. Playing cards guide each player throughout the game which consists of discussions, making choices, answering riddles, and monetary exchanges. Various dilemmas are presented to each player in the game which impacts his/her success and relationship with other players. The game examines the relationship between creative practitioners, art production, and the art market. It addresses power structures such as Patriarchy and Capitalism, specifically drawing attention to ethical art practices. The role of the artist as a creative individual contending with these power structures is a central theme, said the organizers. Natasha Malik is an artist and the founder of The Creative Process - an artistic platform working across the intersections of site-specific curatorial projects and activism from a feminist point of view. Currently based out of Islamabad, Pakistan, she is interested in the synthesis of art making and curation in the context of regional education, history, censorship and social justice. As an artist, Malik explores female identity developed within the constraints of patriarchy. Her multi-disciplinary practice includes painting, installation, film, printmaking, and photography. Visceral reactions to tensions experienced under oppressive patriarchal structures are processed and reimaged through her visual vocabulary.—APP

Naek lauds Bilawal for taking up Kashmir issue

ISLAMABAD :Foreign Minister Bilawal Bhutto Zardari has done remarkably well in not only bringing Kashmir issue in the global limelight but also rightly exposing to the world the true fascist face of India, said Chairman Senate Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs, Senator Ferooz H. Naek. According to a press release, he said Bilawal has effectively highlighted the hitherto unresolved issue of Indian Illegally Occupied Jammu and Kashmir (IIOJK) by mincing no words in loudly recalling Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi as 'The Butcher of Gujrat' at the UNSC. He said he fully endorsed the foreign minister's statement wherein he stated that, "He (Narendra Modi) was banned from entering this country (the United States). These are the prime minister and the foreign minister of RSS, which draws inspiration from Hitler's SS." The former Senate Chairman also commended the foreign minister on very pertinently reminding the United Nations Security Council (UNSC) to fulfil its obligation vis-vis an agenda item that had been left unaddressed - the issue of Jammu and Kashmir. Senator Naek said Bilawal Bhutto, while speaking on open debate 'Maintenance of International Peace and Security - Reformed Multilateralism' in the UNSC, had dexterously used the forum to urge the United Nations Security Council (UNSC) to implement its resolutions on the Kashmir issue and deliver its commitment to peace in the region and "prove that multilateralism can succeed". He was also appreciative of the fact how the foreign minister made use of the UN platform to show to the world that India, 'the so-called biggest democracy and a secular state', was actually an extremist RSS-led mobocracy following a myopic, intolerant and terror-driven ultra-nationalistic Hindutva philosophy that considered the whole of India as an essentially Hindu state that had no room for religious and ethnic minorities and progressive elements. The Senate Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman also demanded the immediate release of Hurriyat leader Muhammad Yasin Malik and all other Kashmiri leaders and people incarcerated on trumped-up charges. He said Yasin Malik and other political prisoners were victims of draconian Indian Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act (TADA) was black law that aimed at targeting political opponents. India's malevolent attempts to fallaciously implicate and incarcerate Kashmiri leadership in fabricated cases will neither dampen their (Kashmiris') morale nor dent their legitimate struggle for the right to self-determination, Senator Naek said. The historic struggle being waged by valiant people of the IIOJK for their rights is indigenous and cannot be hampered by the draconian strong-arm tactics of the Modi-led Indian Government, he said. Senator Naek also urged the international community to take cognizance of India's atrocities and highhandedness on Muslims in general and Kashmiris in particular and impress upon New Delhi to stop its human rights violations and excesses against minorities, especially Muslims. He also called upon the international community to help Kashmiris exercise their right to self-determination as espoused under the relevant UN Security Council resolutions and as per their own wishes.—APP

Railways to restore Fared Express from December 22

ISLAMABAD, Dec 19 (APP):Pakistan Railway is all set to restore the operation of the Fared Express passenger train from Lahore to Karachi to facilitate the passengers of the area from December 22. "The train operation is halted due to the flash floods washed away the tracks at various places in the country which now have been restored," an official in the Ministry of Railways told APP.

He said that Minister for Railways Khawaja Saad Rafique had directed the concerned officials to resume the operation of Fared Express with maximum facilities for the passengers. The official said that as many as 18 coaches would be added to the Fared Express while the train would start its journey from Lahore, through Pakpattan to Karachi railway station. He said that Pakistan Railways had started advance booking of Fared Express and on the direction of the Minister for Railways, the department had taken special care of occupancy, cleanliness, and punctuality of the trains in all stations. The official said the train would run under the management of a private company Ms. S Jamil & Co and the department had allowed the company to start reservations for the train.

It is pertinent to mention here that, the passengers had also demanded Pakistan Railways authorities of resumption of Fared Express, the only train which runs between Lahore-Karachi-Lahore via Vehari-Burewala. They said that the locals, who wished to travel by it to Lahore or Karachi, have been facing inconvenience for over two months as it is the only train on this track.—APP

US running rogue with abuse of export controls

While the United States government may remove some Chinese companies from the so-called Unverified List, according to Western media reports, it is expected to add 35 Chinese firms, including YMT, to the Entity List, which may actually cut them off from critical US supplies. YMT, or Yangtze Memory Technologies, is the largest memory chips manufacturer in China. Its blacklisting certainly will be a sign of the US escalating its attempts to strangle the country's semiconductor industry, and further damage bilateral trade ties as well as the overall relationship. In October, the US Department of Commerce put YMT and 30 other Chinese technology firms on its Unverified List, claiming the US could not prove they were not supporting the People's Liberation Army. They were given 60 days to prove their business activities did not put US national security at risk. Failure to do so would result in themselves being added to the notorious Entity List, a trade blacklist that denies them access to US technology and equipment unless with a special license from the US government. As is evident from what happened to Chinese firms such as Huawei, such treatment makes life very difficult for any company on technology's cutting edge. That is exactly why Washington has resorted to its export control regime against China. The White House makes no secret of its whole-of-government approach to strangling Chinese technological and military advances. The Chinese Foreign Ministry decried the approach again on Wednesday, condemning it for politicizing and weaponizing economic cooperation and disrupting global supply chains, and promised to take moves to protect the lawful rights of Chinese companies. Washington's repeated broadening of the concept of national security and abusive application of export controls are "naked economic coercion and technological bullying", a spokesman said. China has filed a complaint with the World Trade Organization about US-imposed trade controls, arguing they disrupt global trade. The usually protracted WTO dispute resolution process notwithstanding, even if there is a ruling in Beijing's favor one day, it may hardly make a difference. After all, as the successive legislations the US Congress has kept churning out, the National Security Strategy the Joe Biden administration has published, and the increasingly bipartisan consensus against China indicates, suppressing Chinese tech progress has actually become a core US national strategy. Washington would not accept the latest WTO ruling against US duties on imported steel and aluminum products, so there is no chance a core US national strategy will change because of a WTO verdict. They should be aware that by abusing its export control measures in this way to impede China's development, the US is taking a wrecking ball to the global trade rules and the international trade order and global industry chains, and consider whether they really want to be a party to that. History will judge that to be a mistake as it will only reinforce the divisions the US is trying to cement in place.

Tough talk can't mask past failures

The UK's backlog of asylum claims, which currently stands at about 140,000, has been building up since 2013. The government, and specifically the Home Office, bears responsibility for this. Try as he might to present himself as a new broom, sweeping away old cobwebs and cleaning up a scrappy system, Rishi Sunak must take his share of responsibility for the current dysfunction – and the acute suffering it leads to. In the House of Commons on Tuesday, the prime minister sought to present his five-point plan as a blast of bold, fresh thinking. His ambition to drastically reduce the backlog next year, and promise of new resources including extra, specialist caseworkers, sound like constructive steps. But it is doubtful whether these aims will be met, and the rest of the announcement gave more reason for alarm than relief at the direction of travel. Last month an accommodation centre at Manston airport in Kent was emptied out after unacceptable conditions including disease outbreaks were exposed. But ministers seem as determined as ever to avoid the expense of hotels, and Mr Sunak claimed in parliament that vacant holiday camps and army barracks will soon provide beds for 10,000 people. Citing his close working relationship with the home secretary, Suella Braverman – who should have resigned in October for breaching the ministerial code – Mr Sunak also signalled his support for the policy of deporting asylum seekers to Rwanda. And he promised new legislation that will – if passed – make it impossible for people arriving in the UK on small boats to submit asylum claims at all. A reasonable case can be made for fast-tracking returns to Albania, as some EU countries are already doing, and for an enhanced role for the National Crime Agency in combating trafficking. But it is wrong to present such measures in militaristic rhetoric about "boots on the ground" patrolling French beaches. Whatever the reasons for the shift in demographics of small-boat passengers, the reality of life for most asylum seekers of all nationalities is a level of hardship difficult for people living settled lives to imagine. The government's cruel and wasteful Rwanda scheme makes it an international outlier. There is every reason to doubt the pledge to tackle waiting lists with new staff, given that recruitment targets across the public sector are routinely being missed. Following Liz Truss's disgraceful suggestion in the summer that the French president could be considered a "foe", Mr Sunak's commitment to work with EU partners is a welcome change. For the sake of the thousands of people stuck in limbo, waiting for their claims to be processed, it must be hoped that his renewed focus on this issue will bring some beneficial effects, however limited.

At first glance, Islamic scholars discussing the religious legitimacy of the United Nations and the nation-state sounds esoteric. It's not. On the contrary, it's potentially revolutionary. Religious scholars, led by Nahdlatul Ulama, the world's largest and arguably most moderate Muslim civil society movement in the world's largest Muslim-majority country and democracy, hope that the legitimization will counter notions of a caliphate and a transnational Islamic state as an alternative world order as advocated by militants such as Al Qaeda and the Islamic State. If adopted, legitimization of the United Nations would make the UN charter with its references to "fundamental human rights... the dignity and worth of the human person, (and)... the equal rights of men and women" legally binding for its Muslim signatories, according to religious law. In doing so, the religious legitimization would take substantial wind out of the sails of often whipped-up anti-Muslim sentiment that questions Muslim attitudes and loyalty towards the state. That sentiment was, for example, evident when an anchor on India's controversial Hindu nationalist, Hindi-language Z news recently asked whether "Muslims who sing the national anthem become kafirs." The anchor was using the Arabic word for an infidel. The effort to reform Islamic jurisprudence so that it embraces the concept of the nation-state, and the United Nations, is part of a sustained Nahdlatul Ulama effort to spark reform of Islamic jurisprudence and inspire other faiths to take a critical look at their potentially problematic tenants as a way of countering extremism and religiously inspired violence. That's where the revolutionary aspect kicks in. Reform of Islamic jurisprudence challenges a key pillar of autocratic strategies in the Muslim world designed to ensure the survival of repressive regimes. Muslim leaders, parroted by their Western counterparts, have for more than two decades since 9/11 insisted that Islam and Islamic jurisprudence need no reform. Instead, they assert that jihadis misrepresent and misconstrue the faith. In doing so, autocrats drown out criticism of their brutal, repressive rule that brooks no dissent and potentially provokes violence. Casting jihadis as deviants rather than products of problematic tenants of jurisprudence that justify violence stymies criticism of the justification of autocracy as a necessary means to combat violence and promote moderate Islam. Even so, that may not be a popularly shared approach. In a poll, 56 per cent of Saudis surveyed said the government was not "paying attention to the opinions of ordinary citizens like me." Timed to coincide with the centennial of Nahdlatul Ulama according to the Muslim Hijri calendar, the scholars will gather in February in the Indonesian city of Surabaya under the auspices of the recently constituted Religion Forum 20, a Group of 20 engagement tack, to discuss an "Islamic jurisprudence for a global civilization." The Group of 20 brings together the world's largest economies. Nahdlatul Ulama's concept note for the Surabaya conference argues that "views that legitimize and encourage suspicion, segregation, discrimination, and even hostility and conflict towards those who bear the legal status of 'infidels... are scattered throughout classical texts on Islamic jurisprudence (fiqh). These views... are still considered... credible... and should... be practiced to the present day. Muslim groups involved in conflict – including the use of violence and terror – defend their position by citing references from these classical fiqh texts." The concept note was bolstered by a Nahdlatul Ulama religious finding in 2019 that eliminated the category of the kafir or in Islamic law. Potentially, the concept note will put on the spot some of the invited speakers, such as Muslim World League General Secretary Muhammad al-Issa, Forum for Promoting Peace in Muslim Societies President Abdallah bin Bayyah, Tabah Foundation head Habib al-Jufri, and Ahmad Al Tayyeb the Grand Imam of Al Azhar, the Muslim world's foremost seat of Islamic learning. These men represent autocratic regimes that insist that Islamic jurisprudence needs no reform. Mr. Al-Issa's League is Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman's vehicle for propagating a socially liberal, politically repressive interpretation of Islam that demands absolute obedience to the ruler. Messrs. Bin Bayyah and AlJufri serve the same purpose for United Arab Emirates President Mohammed bin Zayed. Mr. Al-Tayyeb's Al Azhar is subservient to the government of Egyptian President Abdul Fattah al-Sisi and supported by the two Gulf monarchies. Religious legitimization of the United Nations and the concept of a nation-state could have far-reaching consequences for the order of the Muslim world that partially bases its religious justification on the employment by the Organisation for Islamic Cooperation (OIC) of the language of Islamic jurisprudence to empower states. The OIC groups the world's 57 Muslim-majority countries. By reforming the jurisprudence, Nahdlatul Ulama would, in theory, introduce guardrails for the incorporation by OIC members of Islamic law into domestic legal systems. By and large, Muslim-majority states have used the OIC framework to monopolise the right to interpret Islamic law and bend it to their will, for example, in the justification of abuse of human rights or, in the case of countries like Saudi Arabia and the UAE, to demand absolute obedience of the ruler. The OIC and some of its members have also used the organisation's religious framing and 1990 Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam to lobby the United Nations to classify blasphemy as a violation of human rights and a form of hate speech. Liberal critics charge that Nahdlatul Ulama's silence about a recently adopted new Indonesian criminal code has cast a shadow over its credibility. The law defines apostasy as leaving a religion or belief and criminalises anyone who attempts to persuade a person to be a non-believer in a religion or belief. It also bans extramarital sex and curbs freedom of expression by, for example, outlawing insulting the president, but puts major limitations on who can file a complaint. Nahdlatul Ulama's acquiescence sparked questions on how it squares that with its unconditional endorsement of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights – a significant differentiator in its rivalry with state-sponsored autocratic versions of moderate Islam. Privately, influential Nahdlatul Ulama sources defend the socially restrictive aspects of the law but concede that freedom of expression concerns are legitimate. The sources expect the law to be modified in challenges likely to be filed with the Constitutional Court. Even so, scholars Sana Jaffrey and Eve Warburton warned that provisions of the law "threaten political dissent with prison sentences and have the potential to muzzle public debate about the purview of the state in citizens' private and political lives." The criticism notwithstanding, Nahdlatul Ulama's effort to anchor the United Nations and the concept of the nation-state in Islamic jurisprudence constitutes the most serious current challenge to autocratic Muslim justification of repressive rule. In doing so, it could prove to be revolutionary. Thank you to all who have demonstrated their appreciation for my column by becoming paid subscribers. ## The Taiwan Conundrum

Syed Nasir Hassan

Washington's unwanted presence in Asia is hindering the region's growth creating economic and structural fissures. U.S. needs to reassess its diplomatic orientation or may shift it to collaboration rather containment for global peace to prevail

Geography plays an important role in the faith of nation then comes the leadership which steers that faith and great powers are those who have both. Great powers of today's world were empires of the past. Many proceeded into becoming global hegemony and rests were laid in the ranks of those upon which great power competition is being played. Taiwan is one such piece of land, blessed with geography, bloomed under an empire, shined under a nation state and now a captive of great power competition. While one claims it to be its integral part, other exploits it to settle its global political feuds. For many the strategic brawl over Taiwan is a matter of recent times however, it dates back 20th century when at the end of decades long cold war, Communists won in China and US backed nationalists fled to Taiwan forming an independent government. Washington signed a security pact with Taiwan in 1950 with an objective of backing nationalists and refused to acknowledge the People's Republic of China (PRC). However, in 1972, US played a diplomatic card by recognizing Peoples Republic of China and Taiwan as an integral part of PRC ending its official relations with Taiwan but at the same time it introduced Taiwan relations act to continue its relations with Taiwan at the same time. Since then, Washington played a significantly passive role by economic and arms assistance to Taiwan through mutual trade. The economic importance of Taiwan can also not be neglected between Washington and Beijing perhaps it remains one of main contentious element in this strategic brawl between the two powers. US was having its tech revolution in late 1970-80s and hence required electronics and IT manufacturing equipment which is Taiwan's jewel in the crown. The trade volume between the two has increased since then making US Taiwan's biggest importer of chips and electronic material. Taiwan's export to US were around $16 billion in 1985 which skyrocketed to $77 billion in 2021. Taiwan is China's 6th and US' 10th largest trade partner however; this trade stats is more invariably dependent on the chip mine Taiwan is sitting on henceforth none can give up on Taiwan for both strategic and economic reasons. The recent geo-political events have made Taiwan a hot bed for next geopolitical

The coup attempt in Germany

Adham Kawa

On December 7, 2022, the German authorities announced the dismantling of a network of supporters of an extreme right-wing group that aimed to seize power by carrying out an armed attack on the German Parliament building and controlling it, stressing that it is an operation that has been planned since November 2021. German President Frank-Walter Steinmeier expressed his deep concern that the ideas of extremists have reached this unprecedented level internally. German Interior Minister Nancy Wesser described the activists behind the act as "united in their hatred of democracy and the German state." This attempted coup against power in Germany sparked a great controversy about the movement involved in it, its motives, as well as its repercussions during the coming period. According to information issued by the official government agencies in Germany, the details of this coup plot can be summarized in the following points: The accused: 25 out of 52 wanted far-right extremists were arrested in a sweeping operation that covered all parts of Germany, most of them are elderly, and they are suspected of forming an organized group, and their supposed leaders include: Heinrich XIII, 71, a scion of a noble family from the state of Thuringia in eastern Germany, whose family origins give him influence among extremists. A former lieutenant colonel in the German army named "Rudiger", who was the commander of a battalion of paratroopers in the 1990s. A judge named "Birgit MalsackWenkmann", a former deputy of the far-right "Alternative for Germany" AfD party between 2017 and 2021, and she was handed over the justice bag in the "conspirators' government", as described by the German authorities. spokesman for the German Defense Ministry, Arne Kolatz, also announced that there were other soldiers involved, one of whom belonged to the Special Forces Command. 2-Their ideological orientations: The German Federal Prosecutor, Peter Frank, announced that the participants in the planning process for the coup are followers of the ideological ideas of the "QAnon" group, which believes in the conspiracy theory, and they belong to the "Reichsbürger" movement; It is a movement that appeared in the eighties and does not recognize the legitimacy of the current German state, and its supporters refuse to pay taxes or submit to the police, and their total number is estimated at about 20,000, including a small group estimated at about a thousand people who have become highly organized since the end of 2021, as it has a central organizational structure and a military wing. Its members have licenses to own weapons. - The coup plan: According to a press release issued by the German prosecution, the stalkers prepared concretely to enter the seat of parliament in Berlin (Bundestag) with a small armed group, in a scenario similar to the attack on the Capitol building by supporters of the former US President, Donald Trump. They were also trained to handle weapons, and at least four meetings were held during the summer to expand the network of members of this group. Recruitment efforts specifically targeted members of the German police and army. The military branch of the cell was responsible for purchasing weapons and organizing training. Multiple dimensions overlapped in an attempt to analyze the timing and objectives of this coup attempt in Germany, the most important of which are the following: 1-Hinting at Russian involvement in the coup plot: The German press indicated that there was a partner within the coup network, a Russian citizen named "Vitalia"; A friend of Henry XIII, she attempted to act as an intermediary to coordinate contact with the Russian authorities for possible support. However, the Kremlin strongly denied any "Russian interference" in this file, and the Russian embassy in Berlin denied any involvement in these terrorist activities. Later, Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov commented that no Russian interference of any kind could be discussed. The German security services showed their strength: about 3,000 security personnel were mobilized to carry out the coup thwarting operation, and more than 130 searches and raids were conducted, in a procedure that German media described as the largest ever police operation in the country. The campaign of arrests was also carried out in 11 out of 16 German states, and the inspections included army barracks in southwestern Germany, to show that the security system in the country is very strong, and that the intelligence services are working efficiently, after criticism that it had not obtained prior information about The plan to blow up the gas pipelines "Nord Stream 1 and 2" and the failure to find the perpetrators. The power of influence of "conspiracy theory" narratives: "Reichscitizens" believe that a "deep state" actually rules Germany, similar to the ideas of the QAnon movement that emerged in the United States and considers that there is a targeting of the white man, which many analyzes linked to the storming of a building The Capitol in January 2021. Supporters of the "Reichsbürger" movement tried to enter the German Parliament in August 2020, in protest against the health restrictions imposed during the Corona pandemic, against which resentment was exploited to attract more supporters of their movement. Supporters of this trend have also intimidated some doctors who are vaccinating against Covid-19, and some of them are attributed to trying to plan the kidnapping of the German Minister of Health. 4- Evoking the imperial past of Germany: Some supporters of the "Reichsbürger" or "citizens of the Reich" believe that the true form of Germany existed between 1871 and 1918, while others consider that the constitution of the Weimar Republic between the two world wars is the constitution of the real Germany, while a third group focuses on considering The legal borders of German lands are the borders that were established in 1937. Most of the "Reichsbürgers" refuse to recognize the legitimacy of the current democratic state in Germany, and they aim to return to the former imperial form, but they lack a unified vision about the preferred alternative system, is it akin to a constitutional monarchy For Kaiser Wilhelm II, or the democratic experience of the Weimar Republic, or the experience of Nazi rule? The recent coup attempt and the selection of Henry XIII as the head of power reveals the longing for the restoration of a constitutional monarchy in the style of Caesarean rule. Recalling the "Beer Hall" coup in 1923: The failed attempt at the current coup in Germany with the approach of 2023 brought back memories of the coup organized by the German National Socialist Workers' Party (the Nazi Party) about a hundred years ago, specifically in 1923. Although That coup was successfully suppressed by the police at the time, it changed the course of German history, because it drew the attention of the German people towards Adolf Hitler. At a time when Germany was facing high inflation, Hitler tried to overthrow the Weimar Republic, and although his coup attempt failed, his Nazi party grew significantly after that. The thwarted coup in Germany could have many repercussions in the near future, the most prominent of which can be explained in the following: Tightening control over extremists and preventing their possession of weapons: There were calls to monitor supporters of the far-right to ensure their adherence to the law, and the German Minister of the Interior, Nancy Wesser, came out to stress that the government must do better to combat the violence of the extreme right, and to prevent its possession of weapons, especially within army and police.

On one occasion in the presence of several PTI ministers, the sources close to the retired general said, the former army chief reportedly warned Imran Khan against his wish of fixing all his opponents as well as many of his own party leaders. These sources, however, confirm that Gen (ret'd) Bajwa had been advising the former prime minister to focus on economy instead of his opposition. During his government, Imran Khan himself has been heard complaining about the fear of NAB and its negative impact on economy and civilian bureaucracy. But his urge to fix the opposition did not let him reform the NAB. General (ret'd) Bajwa is mostly blamed for keenly pursuing what is generally referred to as "Imran Khan project." It is alleged by Khan's opponents and many media commentators that the establishment initiated supporting Imran Khan almost a decade back.

High Court rules Rwanda deportation plan legal

Britain's ruling Conservative Party has made a priority of the Brexit promises of tackling immigration and control of the country's borders

DNA

LONDON: The High Court in London has today ruled the British government's plan to send asylum seekers to Rwanda is legal. In April, the UK struck a deal with Kigali, aiming to send tens of thousands of migrants arriving on its shores to Rwanda. However, no deportation has yet taken place because of legal challenges - and this may remain the case should there be further appeals. Announcing the court's decision, Judge Clive Lewis said it was lawful for Britain to make arrangements with the Rwanda government to send asylum seekers to the country for their asylum claims to be determined there. "The (British) government has made arrangements with the government of Rwanda which are intended to ensure that asylum claims of people relocated to Rwanda are properly determined there," the judge said. "In those circumstances, the relocation of asylum seekers to Rwanda is consistent with the Refugee Convention and with the statutory and other legal obligations on the government, including the obligation imposed by the Human Rights Act 1998." But the High Court added that the country's former interior minister had failed to consider properly the individual circumstances of eight individual asylum-seekers who had challenged the policy. Those cases must be reconsidered, he said. The decision has been welcomed by the government in Kigali. "We welcome this decision and are ready to offer asylum seekers and migrants the opportunity to build a new life in Rwanda," government spokeswoman Yolande Makolo told AFP, calling it a "positive" step to solve the global migration crisis. The first planned deportation flight was blocked in June by a last-minute injunction from the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR), and the strategy's lawfulness was subsequently challenged by a judicial review at London's High Court. The government's victory on Monday does not mean that flights can take off straight away because there may be a further appeal in the British courts. The ECHR injunction imposed during the summer prevents any immediate deportations until the conclusion of legal action in the United Kingdom. All this comes at a time when illegal crossings of the English Channel have reached record levels, and Prime Minister Rishi Sunak has staked his political credibility on stopping the arrivals in small boats. Britain's ruling Conservative Party has made a priority of the Brexit promises of tackling immigration and control of the country's borders. Sunak has said he wants to restart flights to Rwanda, despite opposition from politicians across all main parties, as well as the United Nations. The prime minister is under growing pressure from his own members of parliament and the public, with figures showing around 45,000 people have arrived in small vessels on English shores this year, compared to 28,526 in 2021. Four migrants, including a teenager, died attempting the crossing last week. In November 2021, 27 migrants perished when their small boat capsized trying to make the journey. The UK and France have vowed to intensify a drive to stop the dangerous journeys, with only limited success. Many migrants have travelled from Afghanistan, Iran, or other countries suffering war or repression to travel across Europe. Increasing numbers this year have come from Albania - which the UK insists is a "fundamentally safe country" - prompting calls for a clampdown on criminal people-smuggling gangs. Lawyers acting for asylum seekers from countries including Syria, Sudan, and Iraq, as well as charities and Border Force staff told the High Court in hearings this year that the government's Rwanda policy was inhumane and does not comply with human rights conventions. They said that Rwanda, whose own human rights record is under scrutiny, does not have the capacity to process the claims, and there is a risk some migrants could be returned to countries from which they had fled, citing concern raised by government officials themselves. Government lawyers argued that the agreement with Rwanda ensured that those who would be deported there would have a "safe and efficient" refugee status determination procedure. Britain says the Rwanda deportation strategy will help deter migrants from making the perilous trip across the English Channel and will smash the business model of people-smuggling networks. Supporters of the Rwanda deal say that sending migrants to the country will reduce overcrowding in processing centres and give genuine refugees a home. Under the agreement with Rwanda, anyone judged to have entered Britain illegally is eligible for deportation, with the exception of unaccompanied children. Deportees granted protection by Kigali would be eligible to live there but would not be permitted to return to Britain.

Messi's royal Arab robe draws undeserved backlash

DOHA: Gary Lineker and Pablo Zabaleta were astounded by the sight of Lionel Messi, resplendent in a sheer black robe, triumphantly hoisting the World Cup aloft. Argentina captain Messi scored twice in the dramatic 3-3 draw with France before his side triumphed on penalties to finally win football's ultimate prize at age 35. At the trophy presentation, he was offered a bisht, a traditional Arab cloak, to wear by the emir of Qatar. Messi allowed the emir to place the robe around his shoulders before taking the trophy from FIFA President Gianni Infantino and lifting it in front of his ecstatic teammates. BBC presenter Lineker felt the decision spoiled what should have been a "magic moment." The former England striker said: "This is a magic moment. It seems a shame that they've covered up Messi in his Argentina shirt." Ex-Argentina defender Zabaleta agreed, saying on BBC One: "Just why? No reason to do that." FIFA has been asked to comment by the PA news agency. The emir, Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad Al Thani, wrote on Twitter: "I congratulate the Argentine national team for winning the Qatar World Cup 2022, and the French national team... and I thank all the teams for their outstanding play, and the fans who enthusiastically encouraged them. "In conclusion, we have fulfilled our promise to organize an exceptional championship for the Arab countries, which provided an opportunity for the peoples of the world to learn about the richness of our culture and the originality of our values." Dr. Mustafa Baig, a lecturer in Islamic Studies at the University of Exeter, told PA that the bisht is a formal robe worn by royalty, dignitaries, grooms on their wedding day and graduates at graduation ceremonies. "So only a select few people would wear the best," he said. Baig said about Messi wearing the garment: "They honoured him by putting it over his shoulders. "It's like a mark of honor and just kind of a cultural welcoming and acceptance." Baig said it is also representative of Qatar's national dress - but only on important occasions. "And this is a top occasion. I mean, there's probably no bigger occasion, so they put it on him as a mark of honor," he said. Baig said he saw it as "an embrace by Messi of the local culture," adding that it was "a pretty cool thing" for Qatar to do and "smart thinking" on their behalf. The bisht is a long cloak made out of light, often sheer, material with trimming made out of real gold that is worn over a white thobe. Primarily worn in the Gulf, it is a garment that has been worn for centuries during special occasions. It is viewed as a sign of appreciation and respect and is typically worn by top officials such as politicians, sheikhs and other high-status individuals. Mustafa Baig, a lecturer in Islamic studies at the University of Exeter, told the dpa news agency that the bisht is a formal robe worn by royalty, dignitaries, grooms on their wedding day, and graduates at graduation ceremonies. "So only a select few people would actually wear the bisht," he said. "They basically honoured him [Messi] by putting it over his shoulders. It's like a mark of honour, and just kind of a cultural welcoming and a cultural acceptance." - DNA

'The Greatest': Messi and Argentina the toast of world media

DOHA: Legendary, greatest, immortal: News media across the planet ran out of superlatives after Lionel Messi led Argentina to victory in one of the most dramatic World Cup finals ever. The thrilling penalty-shootout win over France gave La Albiceleste their first World Cup since national hero Diego Maradona guided them to the 1986 title. And it sparked an explosion of joy in Argentina, where the media saluted the nation's latest generation of World Cup heroes, and their talisman Messi. Images of him holding the trophy aloft and the team's celebrations adorned news websites and social media feeds in Argentina. Messi's Argentina had won "the greatest final in history," said the daily La Nacion, while Clarin described it as an "unforgettable" match. The sports daily Ole's homepage was splashed with "We are world champions!" The final was billed as a titanic showdown between Messi and French superstar Kylian Mbappe, and it did not disappoint the neutrals. While Messi scored from the spot twice to put Argentina in the lead, Mbappe inspired the French fightback with a hat-trick to take the final to penalties. - Agencies

Countries seal deal to protect nature

NEW YORK: Countries have reached a landmark agreement at a marathon United Nations biodiversity summit to protect the world's land and oceans and provide critical financing to save biodiversity in the developing world despite objections from some African countries. The chair of the COP15 nature summit, Chinese Environment Minister Huang Runqiu, declared the deal adopted at a plenary session in Montreal on Monday and struck his gavel, sparking loud applause from assembled delegates. The most significant part of the deal is a commitment to protect 30 percent of land and water considered important for biodiversity by 2030. Currently, 17 percent of terrestrial and 10 percent of marine areas are protected. "There has never been a conservation goal globally at this scale," Brian

O'Donnell, director of the conservation group Campaign for Nature, told reporters. "This puts us within a chance of safeguarding biodiversity from collapse... We're now within the range that scientists think can make a marked difference in biodiversity." A representative from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) earlier objected to the text, raising concerns about developed nations' responsibility for funding conservation in developing countries. "The parties which are developed nations should provide resources to parties which are developing," the DRC's representative said through a translator. A representative from Cameroon said via a translator: "What we saw was a force of hand." The draft also calls for raising $200bn by 2030 for biodiversity from a range of sources and working to phase out or reform subsidies that could provide another $500bn for nature. As part of the financing package, the framework calls for increasing to at least $20bn annually by 2025 the money that goes to poor countries - or about double what is currently provided. That number would increase to $30bn each year by 2030. Some advocates wanted tougher language around subsidies that make food and fuel so cheap in many parts of the world. The document only calls for identifying subsidies by 2025 that can be reformed or phased out, and working to reduce them by 2030. "The new text is a mixed bag," Andrew Deutz, director of global policy, institutions and conservation finance for The Nature Conservancy, said. "It contains some strong signals on finance and biodiversity but it fails to advance beyond the targets of 10 years ago in terms of addressing drivers of biodiversity loss in productive sectors like agriculture, fisheries, and infrastructure and thus still risks being fully transformational." - APP

Argentina erupts in celebration after win

The victory set off a wave of euphoria across Argentina, where people have been struggling with an economic crisis and inflation at nearly 100 percent this year

DNA

BUENOS AIRES: Football is more than a game, they say. On Sunday, that truisms came alive in the heart of Buenos Aires. It was visible on the faces of the young men and women whooping from atop traffic lights, in dancing little girls with the nation's flags painted on their cheeks, and in elderly men fighting back tears. In the embraces between strangers. The anthems that hovered over the city. The simultaneous pulsating of a sea of people to the drums of victory. Football is hope, and hope is contagious. Argentina's hard-fought World Cup win over France in Qatar has triggered an outpouring of emotions in the South American country. Joy and relief are competing with deep gratitude to the national team led by Lionel Messi who was finally able to hoist the one coveted trophy that had eluded him. It was Argentina's first World Cup victory since 1986 when Diego Maradona led the country to glory. "Bien, Argentina, bien," one man said quietly to himself, as he looked around at the throngs descending on the Obelisco de Buenos Aires - the capital's iconic landmark - to celebrate the victory. "It really is a sensation like no other," said Mariló Oviedo, 32. "It's happiness. That's what it is." Tens of thousands of people flowed through the arteries of the nation's capital towards the obelisk, chanting, singing, jumping and dancing under giant flags stretched across the width of entire avenues. Anthems reverberated off the ornate balconies of Sante Fe Avenue, paying homage to Messi and the spirit of Maradona - who passed away two years ago - who many believe was looking down upon them today. "Soy Argentino! Es un sentimiento que no puedo parar!" they sang. "I'm Argentinian! It's a feeling I can't contain." The World Cup final was as dramatic as they come. Argentina dominated play for most of the regulation 90 minutes, until French phenom Kylian Mbappé sunk two goals within a minute to draw his side level. A thrilling period of extra time followed, in which each side managed to score a goal, leading to the excruciating penalty kicks and the brilliance of Argentina keeper Emiliano "Dibu" Martinez in stopping two shots. Messi had said before the tournament that this would be his last World Cup, although after this victory he told an Argentinian media outlet that he wasn't done with the national squad just yet. The victory set off a wave of euphoria across Argentina, where people have been struggling with an economic crisis and inflation at nearly 100 percent this year. The World Cup was, for many, a necessary reprieve from an otherwise brutal 2022 that had left people disillusioned and exhausted. Near the obelisk, people climbed on top of bus shelters, scaled the foliage of a giant BA sign, set off firecrackers and sang the de facto Argentina World Cup anthem, Muchachos, Ahora Nos Volvimos a Ilusionar (Boys, now we're excited again) on loop.

The PML-N lawmakers have also been instructed to keep in touch with the party leadership all the time. Sources further revealed that the PML-N leadership directed members of its allied parties and independent Members of Punjab Assembly to reach Lahore. There is possibility that the governor would ask the chief minister to take vote of confidence. Sources said that the opposition might also submit the no-confidence motion against the chief minister. Whether it's submission of no-trust motion or the move by the governor to ask the chief minister to take vote of confidence, the PML-N MPs have been directed to stay in Lahore till further orders. After the conclusion of the meeting, Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif left for Islamabad. The meeting was attended by Federal Minister Ahsan Iqbal, Tariq Basheer Cheema, AzmaBokhari, Khalil Tahir Sindhu and others. part is that this increasing terrorist threat [and] attacks from across our Western border are finding no space in the discourse of this government of a cabal of crooks," the former prime minister wrote referring to the unfortunate incident. He went on to say that the Pakistan Democratic Movement-led government is only interested in their NRO II and its preservation. "Therefore, despite the economy tanking they are petrified of holding elections which is the only way to stabilise the economy through political stabilisation," he said renewing his demand for fresh elections. In yet another hard-hitting statement against the former army chief, PTI Chairman Imran Khan on Monday said that General (ret'd) QamarJavedBajwa was "solely responsible for the country's prevailing political and economic crises" - including his ouster from power in April this year. Speaking to foreign correspondents at his Zaman Park residence in Lahore, the former premier alleged that Gen (ret'd) Bajwa was controlling the National Accountability Bureau (NAB). He claimed that the former army chief granted NRO - relief in corruption cases - to the incumbent rulers despite his opposition. The ex-PM claimed that initially, Gen (ret'd) Bajwa did not oppose his anti-corruption drive to hold culprits accountable "but eventually asked me to focus on the economy and to move away from accountability".

Thai navy searches for sailors after vessel sinks

BANGKOK: Thai military frigates and helicopters were on Monday searching for 31 sailors after a naval vessel sank, with dozens of others having been hauled from choppy waters. The HTMS Sukhothai capsized late on Sunday night as it was patrolling the Gulf of Thailand, about 37 kilometres (22 miles) off the nation's southeastern coast. Some sailors survived by jumping into a life raft at night, according to images shared by the Royal Thai Navy, which said 75 people had been rescued.

However, 31 sailors were still missing on Monday afternoon, according to navy spokesperson Admiral Pogkrong Montrapalain.

The search and rescue operation involved two Seahawk helicopters, two frigates and one amphibious ship, according to a navy statement. A statement from the Royal Thai Air Force later Monday said they were also assisting in the operation, without giving details.

Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-Cha said the cause of the incident was being investigated. "I am following the news closely, about five people are seriously injured," he added in a statement.—APP

Sweden blocks extradition of FETÖ member

STOCKHOLM: Sweden's top court on Monday rejected a request to extradite a terror suspect wanted by Türkiye, saying the crime the person is alleged to have committed is "not criminalized" in the Scandinavian country. In a statement, the Supreme Court said that there were "obstacles to extradition because it is a matter of so-called political crimes, i.e. crimes that are directed against the state and that are political in nature." The court did not name the suspect in line with Swedish policy.

However, the Swedish news agency TT said the suspect was Bülent Keneş and that Ankara claims he was a member of the Gülenist Terror Group (FETÖ), which was responsible for the failed coup attempt in Türkiye in 2016.

Keneş, 55, who has asylum in Sweden, is the editor of the English-language Today's Zaman newspaper, which was owned by the terrorist group linked to U.S.-based Fetullah Gülen. It was closed down as part of a government crackdown on the group after the coup attempt. NATO member Türkiye has been holding up bids by Sweden and Finland to join the military alliance, pressing for the two Nordic countries to crack down on terrorist groups and extradite suspects wanted in Türkiye. When Sweden and Finland dropped their long-standing policies of military nonalignment and applied for NATO membership in May, following Russia's invasion of Ukraine, Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan promptly said his country would not accept them and accused the two Nordic countries of turning a blind eye to terrorism.—APP

EU Commission proposes stronger rules to fight human trafficking

Every year over 7,000 people become victims of human trafficking in the EU, a commission statement said, adding that the figure can be higher due to many undetected cases. Nothing that the forms of the exploitation have evolved with the crime increasingly taking an online dimension, the statement said: "This calls for new action at EU level, as traffickers benefit from opportunities to recruit, control, transport and exploit victims, as well as move profits and reach out to users in the EU and beyond." ## Global financial system needs urgent reform

FOREIGN DESK

ANKARA: Addressing climate emergency worldwide, particularly in climate vulnerable countries, requires an urgent and holistic overhaul of global financial system amid the growing economic and social costs of inaction, economists have told Turkish state owned News agency. The voices are increasing for a reform in global financial system after Barbados Prime Minister Mia Mottley has been vocal on the issue under the Bridgetown Initiative at the UN climate meeting COP27, which took place in November in Egypt. The global financial system is not delivering the resources needed to respond to today's multiple crises and the Bridgetown Initiative proposes a transformative action plan to change it with a systemic reform. Developing countries, which are the most vulnerable against the impacts of climate crisis, want "access to resources at the pace and scale needed to relieve financial stress, enable economic development and address climate change," according to E3G, an environmental think tank. Global South is complainant of the approach from developed countries as they have been falling short of delivering the promised $100 billion climate fund per year since 2020, while the climate adaptation needs in the developing world are set to skyrocket to as much as $340 billion a year by 2030, according to the UN Environment Program. "There is a huge gap in climate finance. The global climate finance need is estimated as $5 trillion a year, while the global finance provided has remained under $700 billion annually so far," Sibel Kulaksiz, a senior economist at the World Bank, told Anadolu Agency in an interview. A coordinated approach from public and private finance sector with financial institutions is critical to increase the climate finance, according to Kulaksiz "Global finance system could be transformed but right investment choices should be determined for reaching net zero, supported by long term strategies and national climate plans. Without the necessary climate investments and with the current slow pace of measures, climate change could cost the world economy $8 trillion by 2050," she said. The economist further said 100 million more people could live under power-ty threshold by 2030 and 216 million more could be climate migrants by 2050. Cautioning that social and economic costs will be much higher if necessary actions are not taken, she said a strengthened climate finance policy could help reach the global climate targets. Kulaksiz said the World Bank aims to provide 35% of its total finance for climate in the next five years. According to data, the World Bank's climate finance stood at $26 billion in 2021 and $31.7 billion in 2022. Maya Hennerkes, green financial systems director at the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD), said transitioning to net zero and resilient economies in line with the goals of the Paris climate deal requires scaled-up and accelerated investments. "Public resources – significantly stretched by the multiple global shocks – are falling significantly short of the required levels. In this context, private climate finance is essential in driving innovation and climate-compatible transition," she said. Multilateral Development Banks (MDBs) work with developing countries on enabling markets, catalyzing supportive policy environments and mobilizing private sector finance, while the condition for success is a greening of the financial systems, according to Hennerkes. The greening of financial systems needs to include robust and demonstrable alignment of financial flows and institutions with the goals of the Paris Agreement, the strengthening and full integration of climate financial risk considerations, and tailoring scalable green and sustainable finance interventions, she said. "Thus, such a transformation (in financial system) is possible and requires a holistic approach. We need all hands on deck," Hennerkes said, including regulators, finance ministries, financial institutions, and MDBs that will provide a full circle support for a green transformation. Some finance sector players are ready and some are getting ready as they see the need for change in the face of strong drivers, she said. "Regulators are increasingly requiring financial institutions to disclose environmental including climate and social risks, so banks are rewiring their internal climate and environmental, social and corporate governance (ESG) to be able to comply with that, while investors are increasingly requiring banks and funds to have robust ESG strategies and management systems in place," Hennerkes said, adding that consumer demand for sustainable financial products is also on the rise. According to Ebru Dildar Edin, the chairperson of Business Council for Sustainable Development Türkiye, sustainable finance has emerged as one of the significant issues of the world as the impacts of climate crisis are drastically growing. "How to create adequate finance for adaptation to climate change and to reduce emissions is still a question mark. We see that it is becoming harder for countries to reach net zero targets while the costs are increasing and adequate finance cannot be created," she said, adding that the current global economic crisis is adding to the uncertainties. Thus, Edin said, supporting finance sector with efficient policies play key role in reducing the uncertainties and accelerating the transition to sustainable finance. "Finance sector should add new roles to the existing ones in avoiding the uncertainties," she said, stressing that the required investment of up to $7 trillion to reach net zero is an opportunity to scale up progress.

Putin signs law banning surrogacy for foreigners

MOSCOW: Russian President Vladimir Putin on Monday signed into law a bill banning foreign citizens and stateless people from providing surrogacy services in the country. It also added that a child born in Russia by a surrogate mother who has entered into a surrogacy agreement with potential parents or a single woman will be able to acquire Russian citizenship by birth. ## Russia, China to conduct joint naval exercise

MOSCOW: Russia and China will conduct a joint naval exercise, dubbed Naval Interaction-2022, in the East China Sea on Dec. 21-27, the Russian Defense Ministry said on Monday. "The main goal of the exercise is to strengthen naval cooperation between the Russian Federation and the People's Republic of China and maintain peace and stability in the Asia-Pacific region," the Russian Defense Ministry statement said on Telegram. According to the statement, joint missile and artillery firing against air targets will be conducted by the two navies, in addition to artillery firing at sea targets and practicing joint anti-submarine maneuvers. "The Russian Navy at the exercise will be represented by the flagship of the Pacific Fleet of the Order of Nakhimov, the guards missile cruiser Varyag, the frigate Marshal Shaposhnikov, the corvettes of project 20380 Hero of the Russian Federation Aldar Tsydenzhapov and Sovershenyy," the Russian Defense Ministry further said. The statement added that two destroyers, two patrol ships, an integrated supply ship, and a diesel submarine will be involved in the exercise from the Chinese side. The two countries have been holding the annual "Naval Interaction" exercise since 2012.—Agencies

Twitter users vote in favor of ousting Musk as CEO

NEW YORK: Apoll launched by Twitter CEO Elon Musk asking users whether he should step down from his position showed that more than half of 17.5 million voters responded in favor of the decision as it closed on Monday.

About 57.5% of voters opted for "Yes," while 42.5% were against the idea of Musk quitting his CEO position. There was no immediate announcement from Twitter, or Musk, about whether that would happen, though he said that he would abide by the results.

Musk has clashed with some users on multiple fronts and on Sunday, he asked Twitter users to decide if he should stay in charge of the social media platform after acknowledging he made a mistake in launching new speech restrictions that banned mentions of rival social media websites.

In yet another significant policy change, Twitter had announced that users will no longer be able to link to Facebook, Instagram, Mastodon and other platforms the company described as "prohibited." But that decision generated so much immediate criticism, including from past defenders of Twitter's new billionaire owner, that Musk promised not to make any more major policy changes without an online survey of users. The action to block competitors was Musk's latest attempt to crack down on certain speech after he shut down a Twitter account last week that was tracking the flights of his private jet. The banned platforms included mainstream websites such as Facebook and Instagram, and upstart rivals Mastodon, Tribel, Nostr, Post and former President Donald Trump's Truth Social.—APP

Dubai retains title as busiest airport in December

ISLAMABAD: Dubai International Airport retained its position as the world's busiest for international passengers in December, ahead of major hubs such as London Heathrow and spurred on by the rebound of Emirates airline. The monthly rankings by aviation consultancy OAG were calculated using airlines' international seat capacity and international flight frequency in December 2022, compared with the same month in 2019 before the onset of the Covid-19 pandemic. Dubai held on to the top spot of the busiest airport for international flights in December, with 4.6 million seats, an increase of 8 percent compared with November, and just over one million seats more than the next busiest airport, London Heathrow, OAG said in its monthly World's Busiest Airports report. Dubai and London Heathrow were also in first and second place respectively in 2019. Dubai International Airport handled 18.5 million passengers in the third quarter of this year, more than doubling year on year amid a bigger-than-expected rebound from the pandemic, according to operator Dubai Airports. This was first time that quarterly traffic reached pre-pandemic levels since 2020, with the figure higher than the 17.8 million passengers who travelled through the airport in the first quarter of 2020 before the onset of Covid-19. Buzdar hits back after Parvez Elahi's criticism

LAHORE: In response to his successor's claims, former Punjab chief minister Usman Buzdar said on Monday that criticism of him is like criticising the Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) narrative. Responding to now-CM Punjab Chaudhry Parvez Elahi's comments about him in an interview on Sunday, the PTI leader said that he did not victimise anyone in his tenure. He added that he also has a lot to say but he has never spoken ill about anyone. The former Punjab CM, talking to the media outside the accountability court in Lahore, said that they are currently in an allied government and such disagreements often occur in a multi-party alliance. CM Elahi had said that Usman Buzdar ruined the province and that he sorted things out with his hard work for four months. On the other hand, the accountability court extended the PTI leader's bail in the liquor license reference registered against him by the National Accountability Bureau (NAB). The bail was issued by judge Naseem Ahmed Virk.

Russian drones hit Kyiv as Putin arrives in Belarus

Ukrainian atomic energy agency accused Russia of sending one of drones over part of the South Ukraine Nuclear Power Plant, in Mykolaiv region

DNA
KYIV: Moscow launched a "kamikaze" drone attack on Monday, hitting key infrastructure in and around Kyiv, hours before Russian President Vladimir Putin arrived in Belarus, fuelling fears he will pressure his ally to join a new offensive on Ukraine. The Ukrainian Air Force said its air defences shot down 30 drones, in the third Russian air attack on the Ukrainian capital in six days and the latest in a series of assaults since October that have targeted the Ukrainian power grid, causing sweeping blackouts amid sub-freezing temperatures. Officials said at least three people were wounded and nine buildings damaged in the Kyiv region. The Ukrainian atomic energy agency accused Russia of sending one of the drones over part of the South Ukraine Nuclear Power Plant, in the Mykolaiv region. "This is an absolutely unacceptable violation of nuclear and radiation safety," Energoatom wrote on Telegram. Invading Russian forces currently occupy the Zaporizhzhia nuclear plant, Europe's largest, near the front line in southeastern Ukraine. "Kamikaze" drones used in the attacks, are cheaply produced, disposable unmanned aircraft that fly towards their target before plummeting at velocity and detonating on impact. Under the darkness of night, a fire raged at an energy facility in the often targeted central Shevchenkivskiy district, a Reuters witness said. "I heard an explosion. And in three or four minutes I heard another explosion," said an old man who works at a guard at a nearby hospital. The Solomianskiy district in the western part of Kyiv, a busy transport hub, home to a train station and one of the city's two passenger airports, was also hit. Kyiv officials said 18 out of 23 drones were shot down over the city of 3.6 million. "As a result of the attack on the capital, critical infrastructure facilities were damaged," Vitali Klitschko said on the Telegram messaging app. "Engineers are working to quickly stabilise the situation with energy and heat supply." Oleskiy Kuleba, governor of the region surrounding Kyiv, said infrastructure and private homes were damaged and that two people were wounded. He said the attack caused "fairly serious" damage and three areas had been left without power. There has been constant Russian and Belarusian military activity for months in Belarus, a close Kremlin ally that Moscow's troops used as a launch pad for their abortive attack on Kyiv in February. Putin's trip, for talks with Belarusian leader Alexander Lukashenko, is his first to Minsk since 2019 - before the pandemic and a wave of Belarusian protests in 2020 that Lukashenko crushed with strong support from the Kremlin. "During (these talks) questions will be worked out for further aggression against Ukraine and the broader involvement of the Belarusian armed forces in the operation against Ukraine, in particular, in our opinion, also on the ground," Ukrainian joint forces commander Serhiy Naye said before Putin's arrival. Lukashenko has said repeatedly he has no intention of sending his country's troops into Ukraine.

EU closes in on gas price cap

BRUSSELS: EU energy ministers sought a breakthrough Monday on plans to cap natural gas prices, weighing the danger of allowing prices to soar against the fear of driving exporters elsewhere. Some entering the meeting in Brussels said an accord appeared to be within reach, with discussions revolving around what price level a cap should kick in. The issue is urgent, with Europe facing tight energy supplies as it endures winter, because Russia has cut gas deliveries in retaliation for EU sanctions over its invasion of Ukraine. An agreement on a gas price cap would unlock other measures that are already green-lit, such as joint gas purchases and a new gas price benchmark. Those are contingent on a price-cap accord being reached. The European Commission had proposed a ceiling of 275 euros per megawatt hour, considered too high by many EU countries. It attached conditions that countries saw as unattainable, including requiring the price of gas to go above the threshold for at least two weeks, and the price of liquefied natural gas (LNG) to go above 58 euros for 10 days within that same two-week period. Those tight hoops to jump through reflected reluctance from Germany and the Netherlands over a price cap, which they feared could send LNG to more lucrative markets in Asia. Ministers said they were now looking at a much lower threshold. "I think 188 (euros per megawatt hour) - that will give the right signals to markets," Greek Energy Minister Konstantinos Skrekas said. - APP

LAHORE: Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) on Monday formed a three-member committee to discuss seat adjustment with PML-Q for the upcoming elections. The committee would be headed by PTI Vice President Shah Mehmood Qureshi and would include Senior Vice President Fawad Chaudhry and former defence minister Pervez Khattak. Former information minister Fawad Chaudhry has confirmed that party chairman Imran Khan formed the committee for seat-adjustment negotiations and to look into issues of electoral adjustment. The first meeting of the committee was convened yesterday.

According to reports, PML-Q has agreed to dissolve the Punjab Assembly under the condition that it will receive 25 to 30 provincial seats in South Punjab, Gujarat Division and Sialkot in the next general elections. A day earlier, Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif held a meeting with PML-Q President Chaudhry Shujaat following Imran's announcement of December 23 as the date for his extreme measure to dissolve Punjab and Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa (K-P) assemblies to force fresh general elections in the country. The ruling coalition tasked Chaudhry Shujaat with preventing the dissolution of the Punjab Assembly by his cousin and fellow PML-Q leader Chaudhry Parvez Elahi. According to sources, it was agreed that the federal ministers from the PML-N would contact the Pakistan Democratic Movement (PDM) leaders for consultation on moving a no-confidence motion in the Punjab Assembly or asking Chief Minister Elahi to seek a vote of confidence. - DNA

Five killed in Toronto area apartment shooting: police

MONTREAL: Five people were killed and another wounded late Sunday in a shooting in the suburbs of the Canadian city of Toronto, police said. The suspect also died after an exchange of fire with law enforcement, local police chief Jim MacSween told reporters, saying the shooting took place in an apartment building. The injured person was taken to hospital in "serious condition," according to a statement, but their life is not in danger. Police were called to the site Sunday evening at approximately 7:20 pm (0020 GMT) local time. "Once the officers arrived, they were met with... a horrendous scene where numerous victims were deceased," MacSween told reporters, according to Canadian media. "They (police) went right into the building and dealt with the situation. One of our officers did discharge a firearm, I can confirm that. And as a result the suspect is deceased," he added. Police were investigating the motive and whether there was a connection between the victims and the male suspect, who has not been named but, according to the Special Investigative Unit, was 73 years old. The suspect allegedly acted alone. The victims were reportedly found in different apartments in the building, which is located in Vaughan, in the suburbs about 30 kilometers (20 miles) north of Toronto. Residents were evacuated immediately and dozens of ambulances and police officers were at the scene in the evening and into Monday morning.

While it suffers far fewer mass shootings than its American neighbor, Canada has experienced an upsurge in gun violence, which has prompted it to recently legislate to ban handguns. In April 2020, a gunman disguised as a policeman killed 22 people in the eastern province of Nova Scotia, Canada's worst mass shooting. In September this year, a man killed 11 people and stabbed 18 others, mainly in an isolated Indigenous community in Saskatchewan province. Firearms-related violent crimes account for less than three percent of all violent crimes in Canada - but since 2009 the per capita rate of guns being fired with intent to kill or wound has increased fivefold. - APP

Chinese hospitals expand ICUs to cope with Covid 19 surge

BEIJING: Chinese cities and medical institutions are ramping up efforts to expand intensive care units (ICUs) and boost their reserves of medical resources and treatment facilities for severe COVID-19 cases in a bid to strengthen medical treatment capabilities to cope with the COVID-19 peak. Observers said that as the construction of more ICUs is underway, lack of fully trained medical staff for ICUs remained the biggest challenge for the medical institutions. Media reports of emergency procurement of medical facilities for COVID-19 severe cases from hospitals have appeared more frequently in the past two weeks. For example, the People's Hospital in the Dazu district of Southwest China's Chongqing Municipality has budgeted 18.75 million yuan ($2.67 million) for this purpose and the hospital of traditional Chinese medicine in the Dazu district budgeted 15.93 million yuan for buying equipment to treat severe cases. The People's Hospital in Caonian county, East China's Shandong

Province allocated 5 million yuan for facilities including ventilators. The People's Hospital in Dengfeng city of North China's Henan Province is scheduled to purchase medical cranes, invasive ventilators and extracorporeal membrane oxygenators (ECMO). A medical staffer at a hospital in Shanghai told the Global Times that his hospital has enhanced its medicine reserves and has been communicating with drug companies for more fever and cough drugs. Enhancing medical resources for severe cases has been one of the current primary targets of many city governments as well. Guangzhou in South China's Guangdong Province is strengthening its medical resource reserves, improving medical capability in an all-round way including increasing the number of ICU beds from 455 to 1,385, to prepare for a predicted epidemic peak in early January 2023, a local health official said on Monday. Since December, the number of fever outpatient visits in Guangzhou has continued to rise, and has remained at a high level for nearly a week. The majority of patients have been adults aged 18 to 59, accounting for 86 percent of the total, while the population aged 60 and above accounted for 8.2 percent, and individuals under the age of 18 accounting for 5.8 percent, Zhang Yi, deputy director of the municipal health commission of Guangzhou, said at a Monday press briefing. - Agencies

JOHANNESBURG: Voting to elect a new leader of South Africa's ruling party got underway late Sunday, with the race tightening between President Cyril Ramaphosa and his former health minister Zweli Mkhize. Ramaphosa, 70, is expected to be confirmed in the role that would open the way to his being head of state for a second term, despite a damaging cash-heist scandal and vociferous internal opposition. But the race looked closer than previously expected Sunday, with reports of party delegates from several provinces shifting support to Mkhize, who Ramaphosa replaced at peak of pandemic for alleged malfeasance involving Covid funds. More than 4,000 delegates were casting their ballots to appoint seven top leadership roles, including party president, deputy president, chair and secretary general, at a conference near Johannesburg. Ramaphosa had been tipped to win the vote comfortably. - APP

20m flood victims need urgent assistance: Sherry

ISLAMABAD: "Disaster amnesia is not uncommon in a world driven by competing goals and the human tragedy wrought by Pakistan's catastrophic flooding has been forgotten by many where 20 million flood affectees still needed urgent humanitarian assistance," said Federal Minister for Climate Change Senator Sherry Rehman. "But the climate-induced crisis in Pakistan has long-term implications for recovery and resilience in a context defined by systemic deficits in climate financing with 20 million people still currently dependent on humanitarian aid, while flash appeals just for the humanitarian gap by the United Nations have received only 30% of the US$816 million," the Minister said in a news release. The Minister said, "When a country has people living on relief and multilateral assistance on the shores of vulnerability, with new lakes being created by climate events, it is not easy to plan for resilient recovery, because building back for complex climate polycrises implies transformational re-sets. These floods caused Loss and Damage worth US$30 billion, so just the rehabilitation and disaster-reconstruction needs are at least US$16.3 billion. This amount does not include investments required to support Pakistan's adaptation to climate change and overall resilience of the country to future climate shocks. The Minister said, "The UN has warned that 8.4 to 9.1 million people will be pushed below the poverty line. Winter will be harsh on the forgotten arc of climate misery here. The numbers are too huge; 33 million impacted literally meant we were reinventing the lives of populations covering the size of three medium sized European countries at the same time. Today, after months of humanitarian operations, 14.6 million is the number of people who still need emergency food assistance from December 2022 to March 2023. We should not forget that almost 3.9 million people in Sindh and 1.6 million in Balochistan are facing severe food insecurity, with 5.5 million people no longer having access to safe and clean drinking water. The UN's ongoing assistance is facing a looming risk of ending prematurely as they are running out of funds to continue the needed support. World Food Programme (WFP) has said that they will run out of funds by mid-January for Pakistan, putting an additional 1.1 million people at extreme risk of food insecurity. Funds are being taken from every sector of the Pakistan government to meet survival needs, but the size of the need is huge." The UN has received only US$262 million or just 30% from international donors out of the US$816 million under the Floods Response Plan. "While the level of human suffering from the floods cannot be monetized, repercussions of climate extremes have torn apart the social infrastructure in the flood-affected zones and people need immediate and urgent relief. The Minister said that over 240,000 people remain displaced with at least 10 districts of Sindh province continuing to report standing water, while the same situation persists in two districts of Balochistan. People have started returning to their homes, but they now face compounding issues of food insecurity and health-related challenges," she said. - APP
